EXTRAORDEMARY MUTATIONS OF COMMERCES.

The favored-curentative channel of yesterday is abandoned to day, and in a-week the seductive spirit is pointing to a new field for enterprise, where the poor man may realize his dreams of wealth, and the rich man striving for more lose his all. On the band, the ambitious ardsan, whose cook weekly portion barely supplied his family with life's requisites. Decomes the wealthy prince; while on the other the rich merchant, whose power and wealth has shome Aladdin like, is toppled from his high position, and necessitated, it may be, to ask assusance from his former dependant.

That the above quotation is no tissue of fancy's weaving, the last two years have furnished abundant proofs among this community; and hence are produced those circumstances which have terminated in the prestration of one of the most ravored halk of commerce with which this metropelis was adorned.
